INTRODUCTION

Although Dickinson College had a history extending over one hundred years, it was not until the year 1886 that any systematic and thorough attempt was made to bring into published form the record of the alumni of the College.

In this year after protracted and arduous research, the very valuable "Alumni Record" begun in 1881, by the Rev. Joshua A. Lippincott, D. D., and completed by Prof. Ovando B. Super, Ph. D., was brought out. This publication was gladly welcomed by the alumni of the College, as being the first effort on the part of Alma Mater to present to the world the story of the work of her children. It should be observed, however, that in this first record no effort was made to give account of the non-graduate alumni of the College, many of whom, compelled for various causes to retire before graduation, nevertheless, in after years, achieved conspicuous success. The records of the men receiving honorary degrees from the College were also very incomplete.

In 1892, on the request of President Reed, Dr. Super published "The General Catalogue of Dickinson College," in which appeared simply the names, occupations, and as far as could be ascertained, the last known residences of graduate, non-graduate, and honorary alumni. Since that time, no other record has been published.

Convinced by reason of the incessant demands for fresh and authentic information concerning the alumni that a new record was imperatively demanded, three years ago, under the direction of the President of the College, a catalogue on the card plan was created. During the past three years every effort has been put forth to gather all information possible, with the ultimate intent of publication. In the conduct of this work, thousands of letters have been sent out, every available clue investigated, until at last the data secured seemed to be all that could, under existing circumstances, be obtained.

That the record now presented is yet in many instances defective, is due to the fact that many of the alumni who must have received our communications either neglected or refused to make response although approached again and again. Notwithstanding all these disappointments, the editor confidently believes that the new Alumni Record will be found measurably correct and satisfactory. Further editions will doubtless present much additional information, as, hereafter, the work of research and record will be conducted along more systematic lines.

In conclusion, the editor desires to acknowledge his great indebtedness to the Records edited by Dr. Ovando B. Super, and to him personally for later and valuable information; to Major James Evelyn Pilcher for the Historical Sketch and many important suggestions; to Jerry Zeamer, Esq., of Carlisle, for data with respect to the alumni of the earlier classes; also to the many alumni and friends of the College who have kindly co-operated in the work.

HISTORICAL SKETCH

THE Frame of the Government, granted by William Penn to the freemen of his province, provided for public schools, and initiated in Pennsylvania educational tendencies which early manifested themselves in all American colonial history. Dickinson College was the direct fruition of this movement which had already resulted in the establishment of eleven institutions of higher learning in the colonies, one of which had for a quarter of a century existed in Philadelphia. The growth of the Commonwealth and the development of the country at the close of the Revolutionary War farther crystalized public sentiment into recognition of the demand for better educational facilities at some more westerly point. Many of the leading men of the Commonwealth contributed liberally to the fund for the initiation of this important movement, and, in 1783, a charter was granted by the General Assembly, providing for the location of a college at Carlisle. Conspicuous among the adherents of the plan were Benjamin Rush, signer of the Declaration of Independence and Surgeon General of the Revolutionary Army, and John Dickinson, a statesman and general, one of the authors of the Constitution of the United States, and, at the time of the foundation of the college, the Chief Magistrate of the State.

The active participation of so distinguished a personage rendered it eminently suitable that the charter should specify that, "In memory of the great and important services rendered to his country by His Excellency, John Dickinson, Esquire, President of the Supreme Executive Council, and in commemoration of his very liberal donation to the institution, the said college shall be forever hereafter called and known by the name of Dickinson College."

On the fifteenth of September, 1783, within a week after the granting of the charter, a meeting of the incorporators was held at the Executive Mansion, in Philadelphia, and *President Dickinson was elected the first President of the Board of Trustees, an office which he retained

*The President of the Supreme Executive Council, under the first Constitution of the Commonwealth, from 1776 to 1790, was the equivalent of the Governor of the State in subsequent days, for which reason this gentleman has often been incorrectly styled "Governor" Dickinson.

thenceforward until his death in 1808. His gifts included a plantation of two hundred acres in York, and another of five hundred acres in Cumberland county, five hundred dollars in cash, and a valuable selection of books from his library. The assured income of the young institution was only six hundred and fifty dollars a year, which was however supplemented by donations from private sources and by occasional appropriations of the legislature.

The college came into active being on the 6th of April, 1784, when the trustees met at Carlisle and elected a faculty of two members, Dr. Charles Nisbet, of Scotland, Principal, and James Ross, Professor of Greek and Latin. The Grammar School was at once inaugurated under the direction of Professor Ross, to whom was given an assistant in the person of Robert Johnson. When Dr. Nisbet arrived in July, 1785, the faculty was farther increased by the appointment of Rev. Robert Davidson, Pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Carlisle, to the chair of History and Belles Lettres, and the promotion of Mr. Johnson to the professorship of Mathematics, while a Mr. Jait was elected "to teach the students to read and write the English language with elegance and propriety." Principal Nisbet taught Moral Philosophy, Logic, Philosophy of the Mind, and Systematic Theology.

During the early history of the institution, instruction was given in a small two-story brick building near the corner of Bedford street and Liberty avenue, in the southeastern part of the town. This site was never satisfactory, and various projects were proposed for obtaining a better one, notable among them being the scheme to purchase from the Government the old Hessian Barracks, occupied for many years as a military post, and now forming the Carlisle Indian School. In 1798, the present fine site, comprising a full town square, was purchased from the Penns for a hundred and fifty dollars, and a commodious and complete building erected upon it, but, before its completion, it was destroyed by fire. Sympathy with this misfortune was widespread, and subscriptions for a new edifice came from all directions. Thomas Jefferson gave a hundred dollars, and Count de la Luzerne, the French minister, headed one subscription list, while upon another appeared the names of seventeen members of Congress. The plans and specifications were prepared by the United States Government architect, and the present superb example of colonial architecture, known as West College, was erected.

West College was the beginning of the series of thirteen fine buildings in which the institution is now housed. The first of these to be provided was South College, for which additional ground was purchased in 1835 and a building erected, to be utilized for public worship and for the purposes of the Grammar School. This structure was destroyed by fire the following year, but was at once replaced by the present substantial brick edifice. Although for many years diverted from the uses for which it was originally designed, South College is now again in service for dormitory and recitation purposes, because of the erection of a handsome and well-equipped building for the Preparatory School upon a superb site recently purchased. East College, built in 1836 from native limestone, is a massive structure, finely adapted for dormitory purposes, equipped with the best modern conveniences, and up to date in all its arrangements. In 1877, Emory Chapel, originally erected as a Methodist Episcopal church, passed into the hands of the College, and was used as a Preparatory School until the erection of the Tome Scientific Building, through the generosity of the late Jacob Tome, of Port Deposit, Maryland, in 1884, permitted the removal of the Scientific Department from South College. It became then, in 1890, the home of the Law School. In 1884, a fine Gymnasium was presented anonymously, with ample facilities for the best type of physical culture. In 1885, the James W. Bosler Memorial Library Hall was opened, with accommodations for the College and Society Libraries, and for the chapel services and public exercises of the institution. In 1895, a handsome and commodious residence was provided as a dormitory for the female students who had been admitted on an equality with men since 1884. In 1896, Denny Memorial Hall was built for the accommodation of recitation rooms, college offices, and the halls of the literary societies. This superb pile of brownstone and Elizabethan architecture is one of the finest scholastic structures in the country.

The instruction given during the early days of the institution was mainly by means of lectures, which, while it obviated the necessity for the purchase of text-books, then so expensive as to make a heavy draft upon the purses of the students, nevertheless, by the enormous bulk of the instruction so conveyed, made so material a strain upon the young scholars as to elicit many complaints from them. The course of President Nisbet in Systematic Theology was comprised in no less than four hundred and eighteen lectures, requiring two years for their delivery. In the beginning, no classification of students was made, the men being grouped according to their knowledge of the subjects studied. Under this arrangement, the first graduates passed out from the college in 1787, and in the succeeding years until 1796, when a division of the students into three classes, Freshman, Junior and Senior, was adopted, the college work being at the same time classified according to these divisions. The Sophomore class and a four years' course did not appear until twelve years later, in 1808. With the development of the art of printing and the growth of native scholarship, the lecture system came to be progressively supplanted by the plan of recitation from text-books, many of which were the product of Dickinson scholarship. Work along the traditional classical lines was thenceforward offered for half a century, during which the institution attained a high degree of reputation for scholarship and progressiveness. In 1865, there were authorized, in Biblical Science and Literature and in Natural Science, electives, which opened the way to the present broad field of choice afforded to the student in all directions of learning. In 1879, the Latin Scientific course was introduced; from 1885 to 1900, a Modern Language course, now discontinued, was offered; and since 1898, a Medical Preparatory course has been in active operation.

The college when first organized, was entirely undenominational, although thirteen out of the forty members of the Board of Trustees were clergymen. The predominance of Presbyterian influence in the faculty, through the fact that several of the early presidents were of that persuasion, and the incident of its location in a strongly Presbyterian community, may account for the notion that it was under the direction of that denomination. Principal Nisbet, who presided over its first nineteen years, was a Scotch Presbyterian, and Dr. Davidson, who was Principal pro tempore during the next five years, was pastor of the Presbyterian church of Carlisle. With a varying proportion of members of other religious denominations, however, the college passed eventfully through the ensuing quarter-century. Dr. Jeremiah Atwater came from the presidency of Middlebury College, Vermont, but owing to a defect in the charter placing the administration of discipline jointly in the hands of the trustees and faculty, the interference of the trustees become so intolerable that Dr. Atwater and his colleagues severed their connection with the college in 1815. The Rev. John McKnight acted as Principal pro tempore for a year, but the effort to galvanize the institution into life was fruitless, and its doors were closed until 1821, when Dr. John M. Mason came from the provostship of Columbia, to remain only three years, when he also was succeeded by Dr. William Neill, whose administration in turn became so embarrassed by the meddling of the trustees and other causes that, in 1829, he, with the entire faculty, resigned. The Rev. Joseph Spencer become Principal pro tempore, and in 1830, Dr. Samuel B. How and a new faculty were inducted into office, but their efforts to infuse a healthful existence into the institution were unavailing, and in 1832 its doors were again closed.

The leaders of the Methodist Episcopal Church happened at this moment to be casting about for a suitable location for a collegiate institution, and negotiations were opened between the trustees and the Baltimore and Philadelphia Conferences of that Church for the transfer of Dickinson to their control. It was finally determined that a majority of the old trustees should resign, and that their places should be filled by the election of new trustees to be designated by the patronizing Conferences. This was harmoniously accomplished in June, 1833, and Bishop John Emory was at once elected President of the Board. The charter was revised so as to obviate future conflict between the trustees and the faculty; the President become ex-officio President of the former, while all disciplinary measures were placed in the hands of the latter.

The Grammar School was opened at once, and arrangements made for the opening of the college under the presidency of Dr. John P. Durbin in September, 1834. The institution now set forth upon the career of uninterrupted progress which has persisted to the present day, and promises to be continued into the indefinite future. Durbin was succeeded by a procession of names, which added lustre to the institution, and which are synonyms of devoted fame in many directions throughout the Church in which they were so influential: Robert Emory, the great soul, which all too early wore out his fragile physique; Jesse T. Peck, Bishop of the Church, mental and physical giant; Charles Collins, ripe scholar and strong disciplinarian; Herman M. Johnson, the rock that prevented the destruction of the college by the War of the Rebellion; Robert L. Dashiell, magnetic in presence and masterful in influence, and James A. McCauley, earnest in spirit and persuasive in speech. In 1888, Prof. Charles F. Himes became acting president, and was followed in the Spring of 1889 by Dr. George Edward Reed, who was elected to the presidency during the Winter and who has continued at the head of the institution down to the present time.

The administration of President Reed has developed the college in many directions. The Law School, inaugurated in 1834 but suspended in 1850, and represented only by a chair in Law from 1862 to 1882, has been revived in renewed strength and prosperity. The Preparatory Department has been enlarged and its facilities increased. The faculty of the college has been augmented by the foundation of new chairs and the appointment of many new members. The old buildings have been modernized and numerous new ones provided. The accommodations for students, and the facilities for their instruction, have been enlarged. And, to meet the new and broader opportunities offered, the students have increased until they are more than twice the number enrolled in any previous administration.

Dickinson College, by providing the best facilities for the instruction of students in all academic branches, aims to accomplish the most useful results by the direct contact of its best teachers with the student. Pre-eminently a teaching institution, it stimulates and directs the student by the most effective methods along the highest and most beneficial channels.

NOTE

An asterisk preceding a name denotes that the alumnus is deceased; a date followed by a dash, a position still held. In the "Alphabetical Index" the numerals preceding a name indicate the class of which the alumnus was a member and those following the pages whereon the name appears. In the "Classification by States and Towns" only the names of alumni living at date of publication appear, together with the towns, or cities, in which the parties reside. For further and detailed information readers are referred to the "Alphabetical Index," and thence to the class lists.

It will also be noted that every alumnus of every class up to that of 1830 has passed away. It is doubtful that any further information of value concerning these classes will ever be secured.

It is to be regretted that much valuable data concerning the alumni of the College, collected by Dr. O. B. Super during recent years, was lost in the fire which destroyed Denny Memorial Building, March 3, 1904.

It should be further noted that in this record only the names of graduates of the College of Liberal Arts are given.

NOTE.—In the Geographical Index names in italics are those of honorary alumni, not graduates, or parties who have sustained, or yet sustain, some official relation to the College. Where the city is of considerable size, street addresses are given when possible. In the case of undergraduates and of parties pursuing graduate or professional study elsewhere, home addresses are generally given. Further it should be observed that only alumni are mentioned whose present addresses are positively known.—Editor.

NOTE.—It should be observed that this table, showing positions held by alumni—graduate and non-graduate—while absolutely reliable according to data furnished, is, nevertheless, far from complete, owing to the fact that in the earlier days of the institution the records were but indifferently preserved, and to the further fact that many of the alumni have failed to make full answer to questions submitted.—EDITOR.

NOTE.—Prior to 1834 no attempt apparently was made to preserve the records of non-graduate alumni. In this particular, therefore, the tables here given are necessarily incomplete, the only information concerning them having been gathered from the records of the ancient literary societies of the college and from outside sources of information. Since 1837 the records of non-graduate alumni have been kept with a very fair degree of accuracy.—EDITOR.
